Gunshots Ring out in Chicago...
Can She Escape the Mean Urban Streets?

Leah Wilson, a single, black mother trying to survive in the South Chicago Englewood neighborhood has bit off far more than she can chew. With her son's father, Trey, breathing down her neck, escaping her past is much harder to do than she thinks until she meets Matt Baldwin.

Working as a white social worker in his birth city, Matt does everything he can to make a difference in people's lives—and Leah is no exception. Even with his skilled experience helping single mothers, Trey makes it impossible for the generous social worker to help Leah.

Matt will have to prove to Leah that she's worth far more than the man who's torn her down and show Trey that evil never prevails. Will he have enough time before Trey pulls the ultimate shocking stunt?

The clock's ticking, and time is not on their side.

Just okay

By Stacy Anita Edwards

Good story. It just went super fast. Has the potential to be so much more. Everything just was wrapped up so neatly which made it lack any real substance.

Weak

By liketoread

I read this book using Kindle Unlimited. The book could have been decent but the author needs to work on her story telling and fully developing her characters. I am beyond tired of authors putting out work that is poor quality. Please take pride in your work and if you are asking people to invest time and money in your books, then please put out a quality product.

Matt, Leah

By Amazon Customer

I enjoyed the story. Love the storyline, it was more realistic because there are people who are there for you if you know where to go and who to ask. If you don't believe you can get sucked into exchanging your body to make a living. So Tamara you nailed it. I was happy when Leah met Matt and was able to get her son back, Terry back from CPS. Please read excellent.

Thanks
